BAFN saved my dog

The money Brooklyn Animal Foster Network charges is used for medical care which adds up quickly. Many of the dogs they take from the pound are very sick. BAFN gets them medical attention and spays and neuters- that's not cheap. And they are incredibly protective of their animals. I recently fostered a dog thru BAFN and my own dog caught canine influenza from the foster- BAFN was not only concerned they immediately took responsibility for my dog's ailing health and volunteered for the extensive (and I mean extensive) medical bills. IF they were in it to make money off animals they would never have been so generous or proactive. This organization is doing a great thing. The money they charge goes to the right place- the health and welfare of the animals.
